OFF RANDOLPH, Tenn., June 5, 1862. sippi river, as we descend that stream from Ceiro, has yielded to the advance of the Union arms. Retiring om Columbus in February last, the rebels halted at Island No. 10, and for a time stayed our progress toward the Gulf. Simultaneously with the battle at Pittsburg Landing this second stronghold was taken, and the insurgent forces fell back to the first Chickasaw Bluffs, works already begun and known to the world as Fort Pillow. On the 4th of June this fortress was evacuated, and the grand highway of the great valley of the West

BESUME OF AFTAIRS REPORT THE PORT. upwards of eight weeks the Union fleet has been od in the river a short distance above Fort Pil low, anxiously waiting a propitious moment for moving upon the enemy's works. On the 10th of May it was at tacked by the enemy's boats, and for ah hour waged with it a nearly equal contest. The latter were then Arlyan back after suffering considerable damage, but our own craft. Affairs then assumed a quiescent state evacuated. On Sunday, June 1, a deserter came from the fort and stated that the upper battery was being dismantled, and that the land pieces were preparing to move away. It was currently believed in the fort that rally credited throughout the fleet, and Commodore Davis prepared to fall upon the rear of the retreating tugs to within a short distance of the fort; but, though force was still in possession and prepared to dispute any advance that might be made against it. After spending a few minutes in front of the fort the tug returned and romised land. Night came, and the boats were in their board waited anxiously during the night to catch the first sound of explosions that were expected as prelimi-

The latter passed around Craighead Point and came speedily within range of the Cairo, the foremost boat of the Union feet. Six or eight shots were fired at the Jeff. Thompson, eliciting no reply from the latter, which soon turned and went back to the fort. Observations made by the rams convinced

On Wednesday another reconnoiseance was made in the direction of the fort, to decide the great question of the dark it returned, and reported that the works were evidently evacuated, or nearly so. As it was then too late the commanding officer, Com. Pinckney, say-to reach the fort until long alter nightfall, the movement long, that as he was lame he would like to was delayed till morning. About seven o'clock P. M. two get a good start. At Fort Randolph are seven explosions were heard in quick succession, similar to, but somewhat sharper than the report of a heavy piece of ordnance. Two ce three liks explosions were heard lous to ten o'clock P. M., and several near morning, previous to be o'clock P. M., and several near morning, as if shells were bursting from heat. Several fire were seen through the trees on Craighead Point, evidently within the neighborhood of the fort. The infantry forces on the Southern shore of Craighead Point sent word to Commodore Davis late in the aftersoon of Wednesday that the fortifications were described, and the fires and explosions during the night confirmal the common of all. confirmed the opinion of all.

LOCATION OF FORT FILLOW—A PRILIPART PLAN FOR ITS CAPTURE.

Fort Pillow is situated on the First Chickenew Binfis, on the Tennessee shore of the Mississippi river, about seventy miles above Memphis. The course of the bluds is rearly north and south, and above them the river per end of the latter being just at the termination of the bend. At this point a small stream, known as Coal creek, enters the Mississippi, reparating the bluff from the bot-tom land boyond. Early in the week provious to the surrender Captain Schimmerhorn, of the Forty sixth Indiana infantry, made several surveys near Coal creek, their upper battery near the stream, and that the sentisel was kept there during the night and withdrawn at daybreak. Captain Fchimmerhorn conceived the bold Hea of attacking from this point, with a few companies of infantry, and, entering at the upper work, would be able to apike in succession all the guns of the fort without being under any of their fire. Above Coal creek are several bayous which it was necessary to bridge before troops could be moved with certainty. Several days had been spent in this work, and on Tues-day last Captain Schimmerham was within a few hundred yards of the creek, engaged in building a pontoon raft for crossing the creek, it not being fordable. His design was to attack on the fellowing morning as soon as the picket was withdrawn, and there was every prospect some of the shells fell near h.m, and he, supposing himcamp. By the time he learned the real state of affairs it was too late for him to complete his bridge, and the evacuation occurring on the following day removed the opportunity for carrying out his plans. As it is, Captain Schimmerhorn deserves great credit for the under-

TAKING POSSESSION. On Thursday morning orders were issued for the guncoats and rams to get under way and move down to the now deserted fort. The rams Switzerland and Monarch got in motion before the more ponderous gunboats could swing from their moorings, and steamed slowly past cliff in their front. All eyes were strained to perceive if possible any sign of human occupation; but the bluff was as tonautiess as when Ferdinand De Soto dis-covered that great river. The landing was soon reached, and a party of soldiers springing on shore climbed the parapet of the works and unfurled the Union flag for the first time from Fert Pillow. A obser rose from the advancing gunboats and transports, and in a short time the rebel fortifications were alive with

DESCRIPTION OF PORT PHLOW Fort Pillow is by far the strongest position yet selected on the river for rebel batteries. The bluff rises ab-ruptly from the stream about a hundred feet, and at all points is very difficult of ascent except where artificial means are used. Along its base for nearly three-fourths of a mile strong works have been constructed about twenty feet above the level of the river. The glacis is at the highest possible angle for earth to be place can now only be ascended in places where the men have dug small stops or foot holes. At regular intervals along the whole distance the work is properly bastloned, moss of the bastlons being built of sand bags, planking and ranimed clay. Some of them are designed for me two guns, but most of them for but one. All of the guns were protected by embrasures, though none of them were esemuted. The walls of the embrasures are constructed in the strongest manner possible, one of them, and in fact the entire bastion, being of granite, chiselled and built up with great care and nicety. The guns were mounted on firm plank floorings and comman tween the Fort and Craighead Point. The batteries are built on a bench at the base of the cliff, upwards of half a mile in length by fifty yards in whith. Several springs gosh from the base of the bloff, which rises abruptly like wall of granite, and afford clear water to the mo the fort. Four bomb proof and well constructed magazines are placed at intervals in rear of the batteries, to the least exposed positions. Near some of the guns were 'rat holes' of General Bragg at the batteries in front of of fifty or fifty-five degrees, and its height is upwards of a hundred feet. On a bench or shelf about which swept the river in their front. On the sum extending in the aggregate from five to seven miles, and all provided with a ditch in front that could only be from the river into the interior, and they extend from Coal creek, on the northern point of the bluff, to a point below the lowest of the water batteries. A few batteries looking the river and mounting six guns, one of them a hundred-and-twenty-pounder of recent manufacture. cut in the bluff at various points. The trees for half a pleasant compound in its adhesion to each pedestrian's boots. A single tent had been left standing, on one side of which was the figure of a huge pelican, and on the other the words "New Orleans boys don't run for Yan-kees." The hasty exit of the owners is hardly in acfew marks of our cannonade—several trees on the high ground cut off by shot and two huge cavities in the round where shell had exploded.

After a few hours at Fort Pillow the boats moved on

After a few hours at Fort Pillow the boats meved on down the river where the retreating craft of the enemy had disappeared but a few hours in advance. The evacuation of the fort was begun on Sunday last, but the final departure of troops did not take place till Wednesday, when they left on their transports. On the way down one of our transports lades with troops saw nomething suspicious at Fulton, two miles below Fort Pillow. On tending the found two twenty-four pound sizes you landing she found two twenty-four pound siege gune loaded with a double charge of grape and pointed to sweep the river. The carriages were complete and the two guns were quietly taken on board. Randolph, on the second Chickseaw bluff, at the mouth of the Hatchie, ten miles below Fort Pillow, was evacuated on Tuesday
